MORE PROCEEDINGS AGAINST AUG. HENZE ARE CONSIDERED

New York, March 13.—Additional proceedings against F. Augustus Henze, the former copper king, were considered yesterday, when it was decided by the federal grand jury. It is the general belief that some of the evidence obtained during the trial of Charles W. Morse, the convicted banker, was presented to the jury. Henze was indicted about a year ago for the over-certification of a draft drawn by his brother, Otto C. Henze, on the Mercantile National bank. The draft called for approximately $450,000, but Henze was released on $50,000 bail.

Henze's trial was to have begun after that of Morse, but so much evidence bearing on the case was brought out during the Morse trial that it was decided to postpone any prosecution until after a second indictment had been returned, if possible.

IDENTITY OF HOLD-UP GANG IS AT LAST ESTABLISHED

Fitzgerald Is None Other Than the "Combination Kid" of the Nat Reiss Carnival Company at the Four County Fair Last Fall—Gang Broke Into a Car Containing Liquor and Candy and Had a Great Time Coming Over the Cut-Off

The real identity of the six desperadoes now in the custody of the police is being gradually established. Although they have one and all confessed to portions of the crimes charged against them and four have admitted that they are ex-convicts, their real names and former occupations have not been learned.

The first to be recognized of the six, was the one who gave his name as Fitzgerald, but who is none other than "Combination Kid," the popular "booby" with the Nat Reiss Carnival company which played a week's engagement at the Four-County fair last fall. "Combination Kid" was much in evidence during the races and many of the local sports followed his tips on the races, more or less to their subsequent sorrow. He was formerly a "candy butcher" with the Sells-Floto shows and has followed the circus business for a number of years, being known at one time as "Kid Glove Pete," the gentlemanly Shetland pony chariot driver with Lemon Brothers' circus, and later with Barnum & Bailey in the tour of Europe.

Fitzgerald admitted to the police yesterday that he was present at the holdup of B. G. Morehart, the Montello fireman, and that he held the overcoats of two persons, "to him unknown," while the attack upon Morehart was made. He did this voluntarily, it was his business to do, he recognized them as the ones who had attacked him. Morehart's face is badly discolored and he has a slight wound on the back of his left ear as well as a scratch on the cheek. His countenance appears as if it had been battered with a club although the victim states that he remembers but one blow. Martin, the man suspected of having assaulted him, inquired what Morehart remembered of the occurence, and, when told, denied that any club or instrument other than a good, hard fist had been used in the job. "Slim" Joseph would not admit any connection with the holdup, and it is thought now that Martin and another made the attack while Fitzgerald waited for them near the spot as a lookout and to hold their overcoats.

The men told Constable Davidson yesterday that while he was searching them in the sandhouse, the watch, which he was unable to find upon them, was neatly concealed in the sand above his head.

"Slim" was evidently the banker of the gang as he pawned the watch in Ogden for $10 and had some $25 on his person when he reached at the station.

The officers suggested that the prisoners return. Morehart, his watch, whereupon "Slim" told the effect companions if they had any money. They replied that they had none, and "Slim" then stated that he would furnish the necessary $11 with which to redeem the watch and signed a check for that amount against the sum credited to him upon the jail books.

It now develops that the men not only stole the gloves and shoes while coming across the lake in a freight car, but also broke open several boxes of wine and candy with which they refreshed themselves until their arrival in Ogden.

Affidavits will be signed by the men today which will probably result in the release of the suspects now held at Montello. Three of them also signed their willingness to plead guilty to burglary in the third degree. Detective Pender made a plain statement to them to the effect that if they desired to fight the case, they were welcome to do so, giving them to understand, however, that the charge would be in the second degree which might land them in the penitentiary for a long term. If they would plead guilty in the third degree, however, and thus save the state the expense of a trial, the opportunity would be given them.

ONE HUNDRED MEN AT WORK MOVING ALONG

CANYON RAILROAD IS NEARING THE PEERY PROPERTY.

Contracts for Two Steel Bridges Across Ogden River Have Been Let to Eastern Company.

Engineer Joseph West of the Utah-Idaho Railroad company resumed active operations on the Huntsville extension in Ogden canyon yesterday morning, one hundred workmen being started to work on various portions of the grade. The men are divided into several gangs in order to facilitate the work. The first mile of road will probably be completed this month, which will bring it to the property owned by Peery brothers.

Engineer West stated that the first two steel bridges over the river would be completed by April 20, and the third about May 15. The contracts were secured by the Minneapolis Steel & Machine company of Minneapolis, Minn., their bid for the bridge work being the lowest of those received by the company.

Mr. West attended a conference of the commissioners of Plain City relative to the contemplated route of the Harrisville extension. The details will probably be determined upon by the first of next week to permit the local farmers of that district to commence their work of constructing the new grade at once.

DOES DEATH END ALL

The question of the place of death in human life never seems to lose interest. It is as new now as when men first began to wonder whether death was the end of life or only an incident in the march toward perfection. Today, however, we have the experience of all the thinking ages to draw upon. The evening sermons at the Congregational church are dealing with the problem. Sunday evening the second sermon in the series will be preached. Its subject will be, "The Soul Homeward Bound."

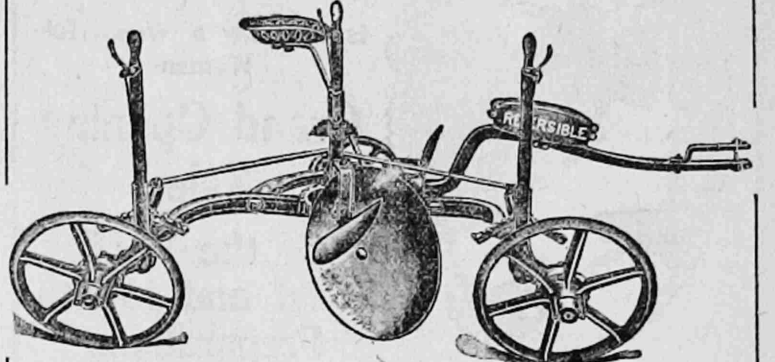

Carlyle said the question of life after death was of no importance. He said that while his house was standing. But one day in the churchyard at Ecclestone, a change took place. His old mother was gone. The question became of vital importance.
